Potential conflicts of interest may exist in the internal teams and divisions or across different entities within the BofAML group. For example, one team may calculate and publish the level of a BofAML index, while another team within the organisation may issue or promote/sell financial instruments linked to a BofAML index or components of a BofAML index. In addition, a further team within the organisation may have trading positions in or relating to instruments and assets to which the performance of a BofAML index is directly or indirectly linked (including any component of a BofAML index). Entities within the BofAML group may be active and significant participants in or act as market maker in relation to a wide range of markets for currencies, commodities, securities and derivatives. Such activities may be undertaken on such a scale as to affect, either temporarily or on a long-term basis, the price of such investments which may impact adversely on the level of a BofAML index. No entity within the BofAML group shall have any duty or obligation to take into account any impact in the performance of a BofAML index when effecting transactions in such markets.

Any information on this website does not purport to set down all the terms, methodology and potential risks and considerations in relation to any BofAML index or any use of a BofAML index. Financial instruments that may be linked to a BofAML Index of this nature may be exposed to additional risks. Please refer to any product specific literature for further information on these risks.

For further information about any BofAML index displayed on this website, please contact your BofAML sales representative.
